

The bug hotel...

Having spent a couple of hours over the bank holiday constructing the shell of the 'bug hotel', today was the turn of the children to make it into a natural five star establishment for our smaller friends. The club shifted to the church for this evening's session, where we were met by Nigel and Jonathan. The group was split into two, with the first exploring the grounds of the church, and the second were left to finish the bug hotel before swapping half way through. Many insects were found in the grounds, including a swarm of (harmless) honey bees – great to see in their natural habitat! We are back in school grounds next week, and I bet we will bump into lots of bugs that have not checked into their new hotel!
